THE AMERICAN DOLLAR

Events both at home and abroad justify the statement made at the convention of the Investment Bankers of America that the stability of the dollar is the greatest factor in world economy at present and that the ability of the United States to meet all demands for gold is the cornerstone on which the country will rebuild.

The status of the English pound emphasizes that of the American dollar, which rings true on every counter in the world. While the American dollar stands firm the pound has just reached the lowest level since Great Britain went off the gold standard. The dollar has withstood two attacks and now stands secure against further threats.

Sheet anchor of international, as well as of national economic security, the dollar cannot waver without affecting every producer and consumer. Investment bankers are no more concerned with dollar stability than the investing public, but they are in a position to better appreciate the value of a stable currency.

America has reasoned rightly that as long as the dollar stands firm there is hope for the morrow. Between this country and peace rises the protective barrier of a stable dollar. It is enough.

THE ANNUAL KILL

Should a Marlin visit the United States during the next month or six weeks his first inquiry probably would be, "What's the war?" Though China is in a constant state of warfare, it is likely that more shot and shell are fired during the great American hunting season than in any 12 months of Chinese civil strife.

Millions of men and boys and thousands of women take to the forest and field every fall for big and small game as followers of a sport which has been gaining favor in recent years as public and private efforts to restock the country with game have proved increasingly successful. And in spite of the heavy kill each year game in a number of states is more plentiful than for many years.

Just as there has been more poaching this year during the closed season there will be more hunting by necessity during the open season. Rabbits, game birds, deer, bear and other edible animals have been the principal supply of food for countless families in wooded sections of the country since the depression.

There are two injunctions every hunter should heed: Be careful and be a good sportsman at all times. Hunting accidents are shockingly numerous and unsportsmanlike conduct is too prevalent. Give the other hunter and the animal a chance.

Freshmen have coeds in the head at this season of the year.

An opportunist is one who skins the wolf at the door for a fur coat.

Football broadcasts don't make the raccoon coat obsolete if you have that kind of a janitor.

Missouri was fined 26 cents at a rifle match for not leaving his rifle breech open, which probably scotch- ed another assassination attempt.

CHAPTER XVI.
AMELIA might have stuck it out if chance hadn't thrown them together at the Rieglerman's tea.

Amelia's lip curled. "What did I ever see in him?" she thought contemptuously and trailed over to him, all gracious smiles.

Avery had forgotten her charms. He put down the sherry, and wiped his mouth with the back of his hand. Amelia suppressed the desire to laugh in his face. Instead she reached out her jeweled hand. "Whatever brought you here; and where did you get the sherry?" she drawled.

And then their hands met, their eyes... the old, tingling weakness swept over her... blindness, madness.

"Oh my dear," he murmured, "my very dear!" while she clung to him, trembling.

If she had been any less the grande dame her pride might have saved her, but Amelia Beecher didn't judge herself by the standards by which she judged other women. Before two days had passed Avery Woodward had his old room back in the Beecher's beautiful place in San Mateo, and Amelia's husband who had his own reasons for not desiring too much attention from his wife, was delighted. He wrung Woodward's hand and told him to make himself at home, and use the car and chauffeur whenever he wanted to go into town.

"Thanks, but I won't be going into the city much for a while," Avery Woodward said. He had no desire to see Crystal again. She was getting fat, and her disposition wasn't what it used to be. Also, she was broke.

When Avery Woodward disappeared, Crystal was almost relieved. Her financial situation had become desperate. With no hope of help from her mother, there were times when marriage with Ralph seemed the only thing.

"I might do worse," she mused and little pictures of herself and Ralph arising at the Ritz, in Paris, of highpowered cars, and sable furs, flitted ingratiatingly through her mind.
But would he be generous? There was always that little doubt, that instinctive distrust of Ralph as the prodigal spender. He talked big money, but what had he ever given her? The apartment, a few hundred dollars, dinners, silk stockings, a silver bag—little things like that. He had never been really open-handed like Gideon Cocklebur, who bought Avery Woodward's daubs, and more recently, presents for her.
"Worth a cool million and a half," Avery had said. Well, she might as well get it as some other girl. Marry him even. Why not? She'd rather have him for a husband than a lover. With Cocklebur to pay bills, and Avery the old family friend to console her.
So she encouraged Cocklebur, flattered him, coaxed him. Even refused his lavish offers of money with shy downcast looks. "Oh I know that other girls do, and it would be all right, from somebody I can trust like you... but I couldn't, somehow. I'm sort of a lick, I'm afraid. I was raised on a ranch in the country... sigh, with her lovely gold head on my shoulder. "I shouldn't have come to the city. I don't know what will become of me. I guess I'll have to give up this apartment, and go and live with Mother in San Jose. She's thinking of investing in a rooming house... it hurts, coming down to that, doesn't it? But might as well be cheerful... You'll probably find me in blue gingham, sweeping the front walk when you come to call!"

"You'd be beautiful in sack-cloth," he'd murmur. But he was afraid of losing Crystal. He had grown so used to dropping in on the comfortable studio apartment he had chosen for her.
"Don't worry, dear," he said when he left.
He slept little that night. He lay awake, turning over and over in his mind, a plan for breaking loose from the iron hand of old John Greely. He must make more money... invest... impossible to grub along like this... what did Greely take him for?

Before he closed his eyes he made up his mind to see Greely in the morning, to break away from him, at any cost.

(To be continued tomorrow.)

He found her quite irresistible. Certain resolutions to see less of this dangerous and expensive young woman, were gradually swept aside. She no longer kept up the fiction of her art studies. "I'm a miserable failure," she'd be lost on the innocent, fresh-from-the-country Crystal, so that presently he ceased hinting and besieged her with presents instead, but even so, the situation was becoming desperate.

If only he'd hurry and propose. If only Avery would sober up and come back.
In her relief at getting away from Cocklebur occasionally Crystal was more charming than she had ever been to Ralph. She would take his arm and hang on it, delighting in his clean young strength. Look up into his face adoringly. "Ralph, darling—I have missed you... we never see each other any more!"

WINTER BRIDES WILL PROMENADE TO ALTAR IN PALE PINK GOWNS

By Alice Langelier

(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)
PARIS—(INS)—Brides really will blush this winter. For the very smartest ones are going to wear pale pink from head to toe on that terrifying promenade to the altar.

A pale pink brocaded satin gown, a long pink tulle veil falling front as well as back, and—a very new note for brides—under the veil and not attached in any manner, a swathed cape of the satin, would certainly make any bride beam and blush, no matter how pale her natural coloring.

Peach-clad bridesmaids add a warm touch to autumn weddings if the bride clings to good old-fashioned white or ivory satin.

Pean d'ange crepe with the new kind of dull velvety surface will be chosen by several smart brides this season. It looks almost more bridal, if possible, than the usual satin.

A mediaeval note is struck in a wedding gown of shiny ivory satin with pearl kirdle, the bridesmaids wearing gold tissue dresses, also made on mediaeval lines.

Very original were the two tiny orange earrings one bride recently wore with her orange-blossom wreath in a deep yellow wax.

Autumn tints appeared in the golden shades used by bridesmaids at another smart wedding in the Medeleine Church. They had golden-yellow chiffon dresses with full skirts and capes to their short coats. Wreaths were formed by bronze flowers and golden leaves.

Several smart brides have favored long gloves covering the elbows and one even had them reaching to the shoulder frills of her dull smirp satin gown.

of about 189,529 votes. This tabulation included all but a few districts in Allegheny County which rolled up a Democratic drift for Roosevelt and Rupp.

The President likewise carried the State-wide ticket to victory but failed to save several congressional seats which were wrested from Republican incumbents, among them a few veterans of the Pennsylvania delegation to the lower house.

The President's victory in Pennsylvania was assured only after a hectic night in which astonishing upsets became commonplace, with hitherto "safe" Republican counties swinging to Roosevelt and former Senator Senator William S. Vare's Philadelphia machine blocked off from its normal 200,000 plurality by internecine strife in the Vare organization. The 200,000 Philadelphia landslide forecast by Vare leaders was reduced to less than 72,000 votes.

Philadelphia cast 327,896 votes for President Hoover and 255,923 for Roosevelt. Senator Davis carried the county over Rupp by less than 70,000 votes.

Vare was blocked at every turn. He definitely lost nine of the city's 48 wards to the Democrats, with a possibility existing that a recount in closely contested wards would increase the defections. Of these, one was his own home ward, the 26th, and four were the so-called "gang wards."

In addition, Philadelphia citizens vetoed the Vare mandate that was expected to doom voting machines installed in the first 22 wards of the city. The vote in favor of retaining the machines was 249,545 and 153,794 for discontinuance.

"I have nothing to say for myself," said Martin as court attendants were required to assist the lawful Mrs. Martin to the corridor to administer a stimulant.

"There is nothing to be said in your behalf," Judge Keller said. "You left a wife and small child and have blighted another woman's life. The sentence is that you pay a fine of $5 and costs and serve not less than one or more than two years in the Bucks County Prison."

Roosevelt Wins in Vote
Cyclone Through Nation

2. The ruinous prices of such great basic commodities as wheat, corn and livestock in the West.

3. Prohibition. While not such an acute issue in the West, prohibition was an important factor in the wet states of the Eastern seaboard. The Democratic pledge in the platform for outright repeal of the 18th amendment and immediate modification of the Volstead Act to legalize beer attracted thousands of votes.

In any event, Gov. Roosevelt's electoral majority cracks all existing records, and quite probably his popular majority will, too. It was variously estimated today at from 7,500,000 to 10,000,000, as against 6,276,000 for Mr. Hoover in 1928.

The outcome was apparent almost from the time the first New York returns began to be tabulated. Like a snow-ball rolling down hill, the New York trend became country-wide, and state after state fell into line.

On the far West coast, surrounded by personal friends, President Hoover recognized it so early that it seemed he must have had a premonition of what was in store for him and his party.

While Gov. Roosevelt was still scanning the returns in Democratic headquarters in New York, Mr. Hoover bowed to fate and sent a telegram of congratulation to his successful rival. He congratulated the President-elect upon the opportunity for service to the country which has been accorded him and expressed a desire to be helpful.

The roster of Republican states carried by the Democratic candidates reads like a G. O. P. blue-book—Iowa, Kansas, California, Oregon, Utah, Idaho, Nebraska, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Michigan, West Virginia, New Jersey, Colorado, Wyoming, the Dakotas, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Nevada.

All were for Hoover four years ago. All were for Roosevelt today.

It is the first time since Franklin Pierce's selection in 1852 that a successful Democratic candidate for the Presidency has captured a majority of the popular vote. Tilden did in 1876 but lost out in the electoral college.

It is the fifth time the Democrats have succeeded in electing their man since the Civil War. They elected Cleveland twice and Woodrow Wilson twice, the first time because of the great Republican schism of 1912.

The decisiveness of the Democratic victory was apparent by the pluralities by which they carried various states—New York by 709,000; New Jersey by 150,000; Ohio by some 300,000; Iowa by 150,000; Indiana by 160,000; California by 250,000; Illinois by 300,000; Wisconsin by 250,000; Minnesota by 200,000; Missouri by 200,000.

These figures, save in New York, are largely estimations based upon the ratios of the incomplete vote, but the belief obtained today they will be not far wrong in the final checking.
